Description:

The University of Samarra is located in a suburban area of Samarra in the northern part of Iraq, approximately 2.75 km north of Baghdad. The university campus is characterized by a balanced educational environment that combines modern academic buildings with green open spaces, landscaped gardens, pedestrian pathways, and recreational areas. The campus provides a peaceful and suitable atmosphere for education, scientific research, and student activities.

The University of Samarra includes several colleges, research laboratories, administrative buildings, libraries, student service centers, sports facilities, and community spaces distributed across different campus sites. The suburban campus setting allows for sustainable future expansion and supports environmental improvement initiatives within the university.

The university continuously works to increase green coverage through tree planting, lawn development, ornamental plants, and shaded areas that contribute to improving environmental quality and reducing heat effects. Several colleges, including the College of Engineering and the College of Administration and Economics, are surrounded by landscaped green areas that enhance the aesthetic appearance of the campus and provide comfortable spaces for students and staff.

The campus also supports sustainability and environmental awareness activities through environmental campaigns, campus beautification projects, waste reduction initiatives, and sustainable development programs aligned with the objectives of the World University Rankings.
